

I am writing in response to the possibility of weakening the no call rule. In my opinion it should be made tougher. I work different hours because I am in health care and it is not pleasant to be woke up by a call that is just a waste of time. I am at the point where I unplug my phone and miss all calls because of this. Why would you change a law that seems to have many benefits to the people on the receiving end? I don't think charities or others should be exempt from the existing law. You take effort to control what I can listen to on the radio but my phone which I pay for and don't have other lines to go to is free game. Doesn't make any sense to me. Please use common sense on this issue.
